Could you live in a 45m² house?

The reason I ask is because it seems to me that scaling down is what everyone’s talking about these days. Maybe it’s the economy, maybe it’s because things are so uncertain and people are looking for more order in their lives. Time to get rid of clutter and make do with less.

At work, my desk can become quite messy. When I feel stressed, I tidy it up, stack the papers neatly in a pile and prop my keyboard up against the screen. These measures might not bring an end to global terrorism, and the rand will still only buy breadcrumbs in London, but they do make me feel more in control.

This issue is about small spaces, and the 45m² timber and zinc home belonging to Ben Smit (see page 22) really gets me excited. Apart from the way it’s been built, it made me wonder: if I could take only the stuff that I like the most with me, would I be able to feel completely at home in that house? Ben puts it so well: now that he lives alone, he actually has the exact same “luxuries” that he enjoyed in the large family home where he and his late wife raised their children. There is a space to sit and relax, a kitchen with everything he needs, a table for socialising with loved ones and a place to sleep. And on balmy summer days, the stoep is more than adequate for outdoor living...

Friends of mine spent a few months in America last year due to work commitments. During that time, their spacious home in Somerset West was entrusted to a family member and they lived in a small bachelor flat in Boston with just the essentials. “I think it was the best year of my life,” mused Thys around the braai the other evening.

Thys’s words are almost a refrain in this issue – because the readers whose homes we’ve featured all said the same. Scale down, declutter, give away.

Is this your story, too? Tell us about it...

If you’re in the market for a small space, our Win a Home competition will grab your attention.

The house is tiny – 40m² – but ever so impressive. Behind the scenes, architects are working on designs to utilise this space in the best way possible – a complete home with a kitchen, bathroom and sleeping area. We can’t wait to see their plans, and you can vote for the one you love.

Two years ago, we featured a pod home similar to this one in our eco issue. It was also built by Perfect-Places – they will erect one anywhere within the boundaries of South Africa. If you already have a piece of land somewhere (or extra space on your property), enter now! The details are on page 6.

Have you got your tickets?

Our new lifestyle expo, 30 Days of Home + Food, is a celebration of all things fabulous.

Because when 12 magazines, including Home, join forces from 4–6 March at the Gallagher Convention Centre in Johannesburg, great things are bound to happen.

Each magazine will be bringing along its own celebrity; Home’s guest of honour is comedian Marc Lottering, who’ll share the stage with our handyman Deon de Goede for a DIY demonstration. Be prepared to learn and laugh!

In addition to Home’s workshops, there’ll be cooking demonstrations, a banting market, plenty of stalls and more.

Once you have your ticket for R150, you get free access to everything happening in the conference centre – including all the demos.

Visit us at 30 Days of Home + Food for a festival of fine fare and fabulous décor with SA’s top magazines and celebrities.

Get your tickets online; go to 30days.co.za and join in the fun.

It all started with an article about an eco-home in Greyton built with modular timber panels (pods) that was featured in the September 2013 issue of Home.

Readers couldn’t believe their eyes – the house looked as if it had been constructed with bricks and mortar! Not only was it gorgeous, it was also quicker and much cheaper to build. It’s a true eco-home that offers seven times the insulation of a brick home. Built with timber panels, the most sustainable building material, its energy efficiency far exceeds national building standards.

People called from far and wide to find out more about this pod home. “We couldn’t keep up,” says Erwin van der Weerd, owner of Perfect-Places, the company that builds these impressive homes. “Readers still come to our factory clutching that September issue.”

Now you stand the chance to win one of these pod homes, which Erwin’s team will build for the winner free of charge anywhere in South Africa. All you need is a patch of land...

HOW TO ENTER

1. Check out the architects’ plans in our April issue and choose the one you like.

2. Send an SMS to 33406 (each SMS costs R1.50); you may enter as many times as you like.

3. The winner will be chosen from the SMSes we receive. It could be you!

A small space with a big heart

Because we’re focusing on small spaces in this issue, we asked a panel of architects to design the perfect compact home, no bigger than 40m² – that’s just bigger than a double garage.

If that sounds too cramped for you, wait until you see what’s possible with good planning. And turn to page 22 of this issue to read about Ben Smit, who loves living in his 45m² cottage in Grabouw – it might not be a pod home but it’s almost the same size as the house we’re giving away. Enter now!

These photos are for illustration purposes; they are not representative of the prize.

The value of this pod home is R320 000. It can be built anywhere within the borders of South Africa.
Insulated timber panels ensure that the house stays cool in summer and warm in winter.

These pod homes can be finished in various styles – with wood, cladding or plastering and painting.

Terms and conditions
1 Anyone in South Africa may enter the competition, with the exception of employees of Media24, the competition sponsors, their subsidiaries, promotional and advertising agencies and immediate family members. 2 The pod house will be delivered to the prizewinner by the end of January; extensions will only be granted if agreed upon in writing with prize sponsors. Arrangements for the construction of the house must be made between the winner and Perfect Places. 3 The pod home is windproof and watertight and excludes finishes and fittings. The prize does not include furniture. 4 SMS competition winners are randomly selected from all SMS entries. 5 The winner will be notified telephonically or by email. 6 The decision of the organisers is final and no correspondence will be entered into. 7 Prizes cannot be transferred, extended or exchanged for cash. 8 The onus rests on the client to supply the prize. Home cannot be held responsible for problems and delays in the delivery of the prize. 9 By completing any details or providing these details you give us permission to communicate with you via these channels.

WINNING LETTER

It fills me with joy!
Marie du Plooy of Bloemfontein writes It’s funny how a quote from my wonderful childhood still fills me with joy: “He who plants a garden, plants happiness”. In my little girly mind, it grew into something that made me decide to have joy and spread joy with fruit and vegetables from my garden.

Therefore, a vegetable garden was one of the first things I established when we moved into our new house (without a garden) some years ago.

Today, it still provides me with great joy. I’m always on the lookout for unusual vegetables and several people, even from the older generation, have seen flowers on sweet potato plants for the first time in my garden. I like rare plants as well as all the shapes and colours of tomatoes, multicoloured cabbage species, asparagus, rhubarb, gooseberries and nightshade. I also relish your ‘Herb of the month’ feature as it offers valuable insight into these plants and now I can make the most of my vegetable and herb harvest. Home is the best thing that’s happened to me since we got our own house and garden.

I particularly loved the step-by-step paella recipe in your January 2016 issue – it really came in handy when we had guests over during the holidays. The bobotie meatballs were also a hit, as was the steak and lentil salad. I felt I had to share the compliments I received with you. Take a well-deserved bow, team Home – you are truly astounding!

With a lick of paint
Delene Morgendaal of Bedfordview writes I simply love your magazine – I read it from cover to cover! It has inspired me to upcycle some really old pieces: a desk more than 60 years old; a kitchen cupboard and an old bookcase my late dad made which are both more than 50 years old; an old steel cupboard salvaged from a school and a very old unit that my mother gave me when she moved into a smaller house. All done with Plascon Velvaglo!

I live in a reasonably spacious apartment built in the 1970s and when I became addicted to Home, I also decided it was time to clean up the courtyard outside the kitchen. My long-suffering fiancé helped. We actually painted the walls today but we still have to finish painting the cement floor as well as an empty frame!

Thank you for the constant inspiration that comes with every magazine!

IN SHORT

We recently welcomed the third and final addition to our family, a little girl named Isla Noel. During my stay in hospital, following the birth, my hubby was unable to spend a lot of time with me as he had his hands full with our two boys.

He did, however, buy me Home which is a pretty standard thing for him to do whenever I ask him to get me a magazine – hubby has good taste, hey?

So here’s a pic of my little blessed angel sleeping while Mum relaxes with your January issue. Thank you Home for keeping me company.

– Kirsten Cloete, Durban

HIS WORK Upcycling continues to be a massive trend in 2016 and the challenge facing designers now is how to remain original. Gerhard gets it just right. He isn’t trying to be too clever nor is his work unaffordable. But, most importantly, his products are beautiful.

“Everything is uniquely produced and no piece is identical to another,” explains Gerhard. “We also aim to lower our carbon footprint by sourcing local materials as far as possible.”

Besides selling functional pieces, Gerhard also does custom projects and installations, furniture repairs, refurbishment and upholstery, and spray-painting of wood and metal. He also offers design and installation advice. Visit silodesigns.co.za.

Add fresh florals to your outside entertainment area with the new Aruba outdoor fabric in colour 04 (R450/m) from U&G Fabrics’ stunning Caribbean Couture range – perfect for mattress covers, scatters and tablecloths. Check out ugfabrics.com.

Wallpaper

INCdecor has launched a new range of wallpapers, fabrics and paints. We love their Diamond wallpaper (from R415/m, 135cm wide) – and they only print the meterage required, so there’s no wastage (minimum order 3m). For stockists, go to incdecor.com.

Shop alert!

Pylones, the French niche gifting retailer, is opening its second store in South Africa at Sandton City in Jo’burg. This follows the very successful launch of its first store in the V&A Waterfront in Cape Town in August 2014. A must-visit for that quirky and unique homeware item.

If you’re heading down to the coast during the school break, be sure to pop in at a charming shop called Verandah in Stilbaai on the Garden Route for beautiful décor items and gifts. Find them on Voortrekker Road or call 028 754 3562.

Bowled over

Louis Botma is a big fan of Japanese cuisine and has been collecting little bowls like these for years. Most of them come from second-hand stores or were purchased while on holiday in Japan. He keeps his collection safe in a drawer lined with carpet felt so that the bowls don’t slide around or bump together and get chipped.
Float like a butterfly
Using simple, affordable white brackets and raw wooden planks, Angie Batis Durrant and her husband Shane Durrant have created the effect of floating shelves in their daughter Nina’s bedroom. The black triangles on the white help to draw attention away from the brackets.

Because the brackets are the same colour as the wall, they practically disappear.

You can use a stamp to make the triangles, or apply vinyl stickers.
Find your niche

Plan your kids’ rooms so that they can grow with them. These homeowners have used a niche in the wall to house a cupboard that, together with two colourful crates, provides storage for books and toys. Later, it can be used as a wardrobe, as a bookcase or to store art supplies.

Metallica

A floating shelf above the bed is a good way to keep books at hand – and your bedside table free of clutter. Remember to install the shelf high enough so that you don’t bump your head but can still reach the books. Then decorate the wall space beneath the shelf – these cute ZZZ letters were cut from plywood and embellished with copper coins for a fun effect. >>
Pull focus

The bold wall colour (Midas Roof Paint in Charcoal) combined with crisp white and bright accents in 11-year-old Hannah Bowles’ bedroom in Cape Town shows just how striking a small space can be. And look at that clever custom-made bunk bed unit with its built-in drawers. It was made to fit perfectly by Stoutz Joiners. We also love the desk with its fold-up mirror (bought at @home a couple of years ago) – it doubles as a dressing table and study space.
Our happy place

Jan Lloyd Cowley and her husband Adam Cowley of Observatory in Cape Town transformed a Wendy house into a ‘home’ for their kids, Izzy (8) and Ben (6). No more toys scattered all over the house! The addition of a skylight helps keep the room cool and the clever shelves in the wasted space directly under the roof add to the charm – and provide extra storage.

Thanks to savvy design principles applied by his architect son, retiree Ben Smit has made a happy home in this compact, contemporary cottage in Grabouw.

By Marian van Wyk
Photographs Francois Oberholster

The structure consists of a timber frame with an exterior cladding of galvanised zinc and interior walls of 9mm gypsum board.
Fiat 500 supplied by William Simpson Cars Newlands

Who lives here?
Ben Smit
(WHERE) Grabouw, Western Cape

Retirement years are often synonymous with downsizing and scaling back – plus the challenge of becoming accustomed to a smaller home. But Ben Smit (77), who worked at Unisa in Pretoria, sees this phase of his life in a whole new light. Since 2013, this widower and father of five has been living in a 45m² (with a 9m stoep) cottage specially designed for him by his architect son Marcus.

Even though he calls it a cottage, Ben's home looks fresh and contemporary, thanks to the exterior cladding of galvanised zinc. It has a cosy open-plan living area that's separated from the bedroom by a ceiling-high bookshelf. There's no room for clutter, just books because reading is one of Ben's great loves.

"I don't watch TV; I sometimes miss the sport, but it doesn't bother me," says Ben. "I like listening to the radio and read more now, of course."

A tiny open-plan galvanised zinc house is not every retiree's cup of tea, but Ben is young at heart and has an open mind about the modern design. "In my head, I'm still young and as a singleton I live well; when the kids visit, we have a great time."
A fresh perspective

Ben didn't find it difficult to scale down:
"If I compare this place to the huge space I shared with my children in our former home, it's actually consistent with how I live now. "I still have personal space in my own bedroom, there's just no longer a huge building that has to accommodate lots of people like before. And it's no longer necessary.

"I wouldn't have wanted a bigger place. To be honest, there's nothing I would add. The only adjustment to living in such a small space is that everything must be in its place – even though I'm actually someone who likes to just leave things where I've put them down and never put them away," admits Ben, laughing. >>

The stoep is Ben's favourite spot. Although it faces west, the tall trees and the roof keep it cool. A screen made of transparent polycarbonate sheeting shelters the stoep from the north-westerly wind and rain without making it dark.

The best thing about Marcus’s design was knowing that this was where I would put down roots; it's my safe haven. – Ben

Marcus offers the following tips for building a cottage or garden flat for a retired parent:

- Privacy, security and accessibility
  Consider and discuss this beforehand, because it will determine the cottage’s position and overall design. For peace of mind, make sure that the cottage has its own security.

- Floor
  Keep it as level as possible with no (or few) steps, even in the shower.

- Layout
  Plan your space around specific furniture pieces to utilise the floor surface as economically and practically as possible, especially if your budget or space is limited.

- Cupboards and shelves
  Always keep functionality in mind so that everything can be packed away and the small space doesn’t become untidy or cluttered.

- Climate
  Heat control and orientation are important in creating a comfortable, energy-friendly unit.

- Stoep and garden
  A covered stoep and garden, albeit small, increase the living space. A ‘dry’ stoep is very useful and practical in a small dwelling.

- Private accommodation
  If the space is too small for a bedroom with a door, you can separate the sleeping area from the living area with something like a bookcase, a half wall or a cupboard.

“My fireplace makes winter a pleasure – I love it,” says Ben. “It’s been a long time since I’ve enjoyed so many pleasant winter evenings in front of a fire.”
Grabouw gets extremely hot in summer and freezing cold in winter. This is how Marcus ensured good insulation for the cottage:

Walls The 114mm cavity between the interior walls and exterior cladding was filled with wool fibre insulation, and there’s a layer of reflective foil insulation under the exterior cladding. Such walls provide nearly four times more insulation against heat and cold than ordinary brick walls.

Roof The same foil and wool fibre insulation is used in the ceiling. The large gap between the ceiling and the pitched roof also contributes to excellent insulation.

Orientation The longest wall, where the kitchen and bathroom windows are situated, faces north. A glass door on the east-facing side lets morning sun into the bedroom. The stoep is on the west-facing side; it’s under cover to keep the afternoon sun from the large living room window.
Down by the sea...

Brigitte Hills has transformed two run-down, cramped apartments in Port Elizabeth into a compact double-storey with gorgeous harbour and city views.

By Marian van Wyk • Photographs Francois Oberholster
Who lives here?
Brigitte Hills

WHERE Richmond Hill, Port Elizabeth

"Definitely not fit for human habitation."

These are the words interior designer Brigitte Hills used to describe the condition of her Port Elizabeth home when she bought it back in 2011. "The kitchen was non-existent and the bathrooms were so disgusting that I stayed away when the builder gutted them; I couldn’t stomach it! The house was also divided into two apartments – one upstairs and one below – so I had to reconfigure the space to create my double-storey home."

With her go-getter attitude and passion for renovating, it took Brigitte just three months to finish the project. Now she lives here happily with her five rescue pets – three dogs and two cats.

The living areas, main bedroom and en suite are all upstairs. Brigitte’s interior design studio (with a separate entrance) and a guest room and bathroom are on the 76m² ground level.

Even though the upstairs space is only 70m², it’s light and airy – thanks to all the walls she had demolished and the sliding door that opens up onto the deck.

By adding the deck, Brigitte not only maximised the sea and city views, but also added 25m² to her living and entertainment area.

"Old houses such as this one all have a few quirks that you need to work around, but that’s what I love about them," she says. "The trick is to work with them; if you don’t, it ruins their charm. That’s why I retained the old sash windows and original ceilings.

"I am perfectly happy here. All that remains on my wish list is a little plunge pool."
THE DÉCOR
A big fan of layering textures, Brigitte has created a cool coastal feel by playing around with linens, cottons, hemp, sisal, a touch of velvet and a hint of worn leather.

“My favourite palette is neutrals such as white, greys and black combined with creams, beiges and duck egg blues,” she explains. “I like to mix old objects with new, so I’ll put a shabby piece next to a sleek stainless steel table to create an eclectic feel. I’m also inspired by nature. A visit to the beach is all I need to feed my soul. I love the colours and texture of sand, rocks, water, fish and sea urchins.

“I’ve surrounded myself with items and art that I love. My home is comfortable and definitely not a showpiece. Everyone knows they can kick off their shoes and put up their feet here.”

When you work with colour all day, you want to come home to a calm space. Five years later, I still love my neutral palette.

— Brigitte
“Best bargain of my life,” says Brigitte of the table in the dining room.

She bought it for R50 from her neighbour, cleaned the top and painted the legs white. The chairs are junk shop finds that she painted white.

Rug from Hertex
Brigitte put a lot of thought into the design of her kitchen. Although it’s small, she accommodated an island with seating, a prep bowl and a built-in bin.

Cassie the Labrador waits patiently for a scrap of food to fall on the floor. Brigitte swapped the kitchen and bathroom around, and ended up with half a cement floor and half a wooden floor in the kitchen. Her budget solution was to router lines that match those of the timber boards into the cement. She painted the entire floor white so you can’t see where the cement stops and the wood starts.

Pendants from The Gatehouse at Mavromac

By adding a deck, Brigitte completely transformed the exterior. The décor on the deck (below) is a nod to the coastal setting.

What was once a small bathroom window is now a sliding door that opens onto the patio.
For her bedroom, which has an en-suite bathroom, Brigitte wanted a relaxing, calm atmosphere. “Quality bed linen is very, very important,” she says.

[BRIGITTE’S DÉCOR TIPS]

- Open plan works best; you may need to reconfigure rooms to create a better flow or an en-suite bathroom.
- Outdoor spaces are an extension of the home, much like an extra room. Large doors or windows leading onto a small garden or deck create the illusion of greater space and also let in more light. However, consider how this will affect the overall look and style of your home. The interior and exterior need to work together and are equally important.
- Rather than several small pieces of furniture, choose a few well-proportioned functional items.
- Hang curtains to full height just below the cornice. This draws the eye up and makes a room appear bigger.
- Don’t be afraid of white. It creates an uncomplicated blank canvas for whatever you want to throw at it. If ever I do get tired of the greys and neutrals, I can change to another colour palette with ease.
- Layer upon layer of texture adds personality. Normally, I preach that less is more, but not when it comes to textures. More is more!
- Storage is key, so look for wasted space that can be cleverly utilised. Clutter is a killer – let go of your junk!

Swapping the kitchen and bathroom around made it possible to create this en-suite for the main bedroom (below). Brigitte found the bath in her previous garden in Richmond Hill. “It was a ‘fish pond’ or, more accurately, a mosquito breeding ground! I stored it for a few years and then planned this bathroom around it. It was re-enamelled and now it’s as good as new.” For the vanity, Brigitte bought an old cupboard, removed the wooden top and replaced it with Carrara marble.
Tip
Good lighting can transform a mediocre space, making it cozy and comfortable. Rather than playing it too safe with downlighters throughout, it’s worth hunting for focal point feature lights. Look in antique stores for old pieces that just need a bit of TLC. Breathe a bit of life into them and they will transform your home. >>

Brigitte's dad, Charlie Hills, bought this wrought-iron bed for her when she was a young girl. It's now in her guest room. The down quilt was a second-hand find.

"I'm totally mad about these old quilts! Whenever I find one, I have to buy it. I wash them and have them filled with new down," says Brigitte.

The area at the front door offers a taste of the visual feast that awaits visitors. An old work of art that the homeowners no longer like has simply been covered with paint samples and a cabinet on wheels makes for a quirky mobile display.

Exploring this characterful apartment is like paging through a comic book – every corner presents a new adventure.

An old kitchen dresser in the living room provides storage and display space for beautiful white crockery and other finds, with plenty of room for utility items such as tablecloths. Not everything can be packed away, so attractive functional items are stacked together and shown off. The plates on the wall were made by artist Hylton Nel.
Seamless white epoxy flooring creates a flow between the rooms and reflects the light. Together with the white walls, it creates a striking contrast to the darker corners.

Bohemian and eclectic is how Francois de Villiers and Eben Keun describe their apartment in Killarney, Johannesburg. Both of them are sentimental collectors and everything in their home tells a story. “We are like crows, except that we don’t just bring home shiny things,” explains Francois.

Although their décor evolved organically, things sometimes change quickly: a year or so ago, the apartment was black and white, but now there are splashes of colour everywhere. Francois is very creative and says he is inspired by the world around him on a daily basis. Who knows what will pique his interest next...

They’ve been living here for three years but only purchased the apartment last year. The previous owners had demolished the wall between the dining room and living room and made doorways between the living room and main bedroom. French doors were also added to the patio. It is precisely this patio with its wonderful view that attracted them to this apartment.

“No two sunsets are the same and each one is breathtaking,” says Francois. Although he’s a keen gardener, he has made peace with living in a flat and says the panoramic views out over Johannesburg’s huge green urban space offers enough comfort. However, their small balcony is brimming with an assortment of potted plants.
Where do they get their collectibles?
Francois and Eben like to attend auctions, especially those held by Russell Kaplan. A favourite shop for exotic glasses and crockery is Osbro.

Only blinds separate the master bedroom from the living area – when they’re raised, the apartment feels airy and spacious.

The kitchen is next on their list for a revamp. For now, it's a fresh white with eye-catching décor including matching prints of Vladimir Tretchikoff's famous Dying Swan. Old kitchen cupboards were updated with new leather handles.

If space is limited, why not hang art in the kitchen? Just make sure it doesn't get damaged by steam.
The ‘abnormal’ sign above the bed originally belonged to a large truck. “I like to give an unexpected new function to items I collect,” says Eben.

A sliding door in this bathroom creates more space, allowing for a double vanity.

A collection of coloured retro glass items creates a cheerful still life.

The guest bedroom also serves as an office and provides much-needed storage space.

A floating bookshelf takes up little room and creates the illusion of space. Go to emergingcreatives.co.za for something similar.

Playful objects in unexpected nooks add interest.
Francois offers advice on small spaces

• Keep a small open-plan home neat because there’s no door that you can close if someone shows up unexpectedly.
• Group ornaments together, either by colour or style. A few items that tell the same story placed together have greater impact.
• Create quiet spots where your eye can rest.
• Freestanding cupboards can be less imposing than built-in cupboards but still provide the necessary storage space.
• Furnish rooms according to your own needs. This apartment doesn’t have a proper lounge or TV room: “We’d rather spend time around the table, socialising with friends,” explains Francois. The round table can be extended to accommodate more guests, while the Chesterfield sofa provides additional seating.
• Make the most of the space available to you. I believe the leafy view of Johannesburg makes our apartment feel a lot bigger.
• Paint certain walls black (we used Desert Darkness from Dulux) so that they fade into the background – this also goes a long way in making a small space feel bigger.
• Uniform floors throughout provide a seamless flow between rooms.

Eben’s vision was to create a homely vantage point from which they could look out over the treetops.

An old scaffolding plank picked up on Silvia’s farm in Wartburg was fitted with castors and now serves as a coffee table that can easily be rolled out of the way to make more space in the lounge. The ‘scatter cushions’ are in fact regular pillows that have been covered in an upholstery fabric. When extra pillows are needed for guests sleeping over, these are simply covered with white pillow cases; there are no unnecessary decorative pillows filling cupboards in this small space.
Made to measure

This neat little apartment on Durban’s beachfront is proof that a small space doesn’t have to compromise on style.

By Wicus Pretorius • Photographs Sally Chance • Styling Kim Bougaardt
Silvia fitted the kitchen with freestanding units from her Swedish Style range. “I used solid ash wood tops in blonde,” she says. Open shelving above the oven provides enough space for everyday items such as coffee mugs and glasses, which frees up space in the cupboards and minimises clutter. Crockery in white is a savvy choice as it virtually ‘disappears’ when placed against a white background. The splashback was done with mosaic tiles from Douglas Jones. The stools were also made from ash wood. “I stained the legs with Plascon Wood Stain Imbuia so that they don’t show dirt when you put your feet on the bottom rail,” explains Silvia.

If drawer space is limited, leave cutlery out on the counter for easy access (see opposite) – just grab and go! The kitchen counter with its ash wood finish offers plenty of seating on both sides.
Silvia and Guy Miles’s beachfront apartment is the ultimate in lock-up-and-go convenience and it works for the whole family – especially their surf-crazy kids!

The couple, who live in the KwaZulu-Natal Midlands, bought this one-bedroom apartment on North Beach two years ago and renovated it to small-space perfection. Here, their two student daughters and teenage son can stay over on weekends and make the most of it when the surf’s up. And although it’s on the small side, there’s still plenty of room – thanks to clever planning, as many as six people can kick back and relax after a day in the sun.

“It’s also very convenient for me when I have business appointments in the city, an early plane to catch or plan to visit my parents,” says Silvia. “I love Durban and enjoy spending time here. It has excellent restaurants and an interesting nightlife.”

When Silvia bought the apartment in 2014 it was rather run-down but as owner of Milestone Kitchens she was able to custom-make furniture to suit the space – and, of course, add her own personal touch.

The project took about six months and with the help of designer Tracy Kelly of Nom de Plume Studio, Silvia has created the ideal space. >>

The cupboard behind the pillar in the small passage (left) provides storage space for a broom, groceries and linen, a clever space-saving trick that makes the most of an otherwise under-utilised area.
I used monochromatic colours and fabrics with simple designs throughout the apartment. I also make a point of keeping clutter to a bare minimum – only keep what you use regularly! – Silvia

[THE BALCONY]
This tiny reading nook used to be a balcony (it had already been enclosed when Silvia bought the apartment) and now also serves as an extra sleeping space. "It’s a great spot to read a book or page through a magazine if you need time out," says Silvia.

The mattress is narrower than standard but it’s still wide enough to sleep on and can easily be covered with a fitted sheet. As in the lounge, the ‘scatter cushions’ here are simply regular pillows. A large mirror on the wall creates the illusion of a bigger space. "Everybody knows this trick by now, right?" Silvia laughs.

Create clever storage solutions: for example, stash towels and shoes in a basket so you don’t keep tripping over stuff that’s left lying around on the floor.

The rustic bamboo towel rail close to the front door (top left) is a practical addition with ample hanging space for hats and beach paraphernalia – there’s even a handy shelf below for beach towels. “Everything rusts close to the beach so we opted for wood, plastic and stainless steel,” says Silvia.

In the bathroom (right), a beach landscape taken by well-known Durban photographer Jon Ivins creates a focal wall and a sense of greater space in this small room. Silvia found the picture online and asked Jon to print it on wallpaper.

The pedestals in the main bedroom are actually bar stools which can also be used for extra seating when necessary.

Annie Klopper and Jaco de Wet
(WHERE) Sea Point, Cape Town

Because the living room also serves as a dining room, a narrow table positioned right against the wall is ideal. The table, a gift from Annie’s parents, is made from recycled Oregon pine ceiling boards. She painted the legs white to lighten the look in this small space. When they have visitors, they move the table away from the wall and put chairs around it. Annie also uses the table as a desk; her laptop and study materials are stored in a cupboard alongside it.
Make your mark in a rented space

“Books needn’t be dust-collectors,” says Annie. “Arrange yours by colour to create a striking focal point. I got this idea from Home!”
When Annie Klopper and her boyfriend, Jaco de Wet, suddenly had to find a new place to stay, a neglected studio apartment in Sea Point was the most affordable option.

Although they’re renting, they were able to make cosmetic changes to the 75m² bachelor flat with the consent of the owner – and now it really feels like home.

Dusty and dated it definitely isn’t. Best of all? It didn’t cost them an arm and a leg, and with a bit of clever planning they’ll be able to remove new accessories such as pendant lights and floating shelves and take them with them when they move again someday. The total cost of the transformation came to about R8 000, of which roughly R3 000 was spent on items they can keep.

Take a look at Annie and Jaco’s apartment and be inspired – their makeover offers plenty of clever ideas you can try out in your own space.

If your rental home has limited storage space, consider floating shelves on the walls. They also add height. Or hang items against the wall; Jaco did just that to display his collection of guitars (previous page).

Prevent open shelving from becoming untidy by arranging elements in groups of three or five, leaving breathing space in-between! Keep your arrangement forever fresh by incorporating plants. – Annie
THE LIVING AREA

Although the apartment isn’t very spacious, Annie painted a focal wall in the same grey as the entrance hall. “There was more than enough paint left over, so nothing was wasted. In addition, it creates cohesion between the entrance hall and living area,” she explains.

First get permission from the owner, Annie advises, and undertake to repaint it when you move out. Then you shouldn’t have any problems. “And don’t be afraid of a dark wall in a small space – it adds depth, especially when there’s enough natural light, like in this room which leads out to a sunny balcony.”

The collection of vintage mirrors adds to the sense of space and reflects the detail on the floating shelves which Jaco put up on the wall opposite the focal wall. >>

THE ENTRANCE HALL

Put your personal stamp on your home right at the entrance, says Annie.

“Paint an accent wall and replace an unsightly ceiling light. It’s something you can spend a few rands on, seeing as you’ll be able to take it with you when you move. Just make sure you store the owner’s lamps somewhere safe and put them back when you relocate!”

The old freestanding bookcase from Annie’s childhood bedroom provides extra storage space for books and magazines. On the second shelf, Annie has placed a wooden crate in which items such as sunglasses, memory sticks and other clutter can be kept neatly stored and close at hand. Artwork bought at pawn shops decorates the once empty walls.

Just a bare bulb hanging from the ceiling provided light in the entrance hall, but now a grey cord (about R50 from Builders) and bronze-coloured shade from Abode (R350) have transformed it into a focal point.

The walls and ceiling were given a fresh coat of white paint, while the accent wall was painted in Plascon’s Charcoal. “The coat rack was rescued from our previous home. The owner was planning to throw it away when he started renovations.”
[THE BEDROOM]

The freestanding cupboards that separate the bedroom from the living area were already in the apartment and can be moved at will. They were in a rather bad condition, but Annie and Jaco rolled up their sleeves and, with the owner’s permission, sanded the wood and gave them a fresh coat of white paint; they also replaced the old doorknobs. Because there are no windows in the bedroom area, they placed potted plants on top of the cupboards – this allows in enough light from the living area and makes it feel like you’re ‘outdoors’. “And it prevents the top of the cupboards from becoming an unsightly storage area!” says Annie.

The mirrors behind the bed were already there when they moved in. They make the room seem bigger and reflect the available light.

The vintage suitcase underneath the bed belonged to Annie’s grandfather; it provides storage space for her scarves, gloves and handbags. The wire lampshade is the framework of an old lamp the couple bought for R10 at a flea market.

Because there’s no room for bedside lamps, I move my study lamp to the bedroom if I want to read in bed. I’m still looking for a lamp that I can clamp onto the floating shelf. – Annie
[THE BATHROOM]
An advantage of a small space is that you can re-tile the floor fairly cheaply. “The owner of the apartment was only too happy that we were prepared to replace the old, broken vinyl tiles and paid for the new ones. Here, black and white mosaic tiles have restored the 1950s bathroom to its former glory. They come in 30 x 30cm sheets and cost R150 for a pack of three.

The old steel window frames and burglar bars received a coat of white paint, and affordable plastic blinds from MRP Home were installed. The blinds create a clean, well-rounded look and are a practical solution, especially since the showerhead is situated above the bath.

A striking shower curtain (this one from Ikea was a gift from overseas) brightens up the bathroom and with a fresh lick of white paint on the walls and ceiling, the room once again looks bright and airy.

“We didn’t paint any tiles,” says Annie. “We liked the original 50s colours in the bathroom – lilac and light-blue. They just needed a thorough cleaning and new grout. We did re-spray the bath though – this was done by Renu-a-Bath at a cost of about R1 500.”

[THE KITCHEN]
“Our inspiration for the kitchen renovation was 1950s diners – our priority was to utilise the limited space as best as possible,” says Annie.

“When we moved in, the only work surface was a tiny piece of blue formica in the corner next to the stove. There was also a small built-in breakfast nook, but the table was full of burn marks and the plywood was crumbling.”

Jaco made a new table for the breakfast nook with timber and L-brackets, as well as a handy extra work surface high enough to accommodate the washing machine and tumble-dryer underneath. They painted it with high gloss enamel in the same blue as the existing small countertop and glued a black plastic strip around the edge.

The floor was covered in broken vinyl tiles. “We replaced them with black and white porcelain tiles from CTM, which together with the bathroom tiles cost just R2 500,” says Annie. “We sanded the white cupboards and repainted them, and the walls also received a fresh coat of white paint.

“A small three-plate stove also works better in this space than the massive old-fashioned stove that, in consultation with the owner, we donated to charity.”

The couple sold the contemporary kitchen – and used the proceeds to pay for the rest of their project. Clever!
The bar stools in the kitchen were second-hand buys; the Oosthuizens had all of them, except the red ones, re-upholstered. After the walls were demolished, a new supporting pillar made by Kazik’s Metal Works was installed to support the mezzanine level above the kitchen.

Turn back the clock

New is always better, isn’t it? These renovators disagree...
Most entries in our Fix it with Flair competition are projects in which old houses are given a brand-new look, but Anton and Julie were the exception: last year, they took a newly renovated house and made it ‘old’ again – kitchen and all!

“The designer kitchen was very nice but it didn’t fit in with our lifestyle. We like a laid-back house in which we can live and entertain comfortably,” says Anton, an IT consultant, about the house they bought in Greyton in the Western Cape in 2013. “The kitchen was also very cramped and Julie, an artist, couldn’t stand the floor tiles!”

After living in the house for a year, they tackled their home improvement project with the help of a local builder. Within five weeks, they’d created a home with a warm farmhouse style that’s full of character – and they’d removed all evidence of the previous contemporary alterations.

“The fireplace in the living room was renovated at the last minute,” says Anton. “The flue was exposed and thanks to the stones and railway sleeper, it was transformed in a day. We also painted the interior walls with textured paint to create a rustic look.”
"We enclosed the courtyard, creating a small scullery. The new open-plan kitchen was fitted with freestanding units purchased from Kim’s Corner in East London – a wonderful shop if you like the farmhouse style.

“French doors to the back stoep were installed so the couple can enjoy a view of the mountains and the Greyton Nature Reserve. A new deck extends the living area when the doors are opened.

“The ugly floor tiles were coated with a fantastic cement product called Smooth and Patch from Technical Finishes,” says Julie. “We also installed a Dover stove that we already had.”

The textured paint on the interior walls is Dirty Olive from Africote’s Cement Naturals range.
Stoop 1

The house has two stoops; this one situated at the front of the house is east-facing. A small wooden deck was added to extend the stoep and connect it to the living area.

From the back stoep, Anton and Julie have unlimited views of the Greyton Nature Reserve, and it’s here that they enjoy the sunset. “By moving the position of the door and windows, we changed the flow and use of the area.” The artwork is by Gert Naude, a friend of the Oosthuizens.

Q&A with the Oosthuizens

Any cost-cutting tips? Besides the beds, none of the furniture is new. Freestanding kitchen cupboards are also cheaper than a built-in kitchen.

Any other tips? Clever outdoor entertainment areas will soon give your home a completely new feel.

What do you like most? The kitchen! We spend a lot of time here and the Dover stove is wonderful in winter.

What’s next? We’ve just renovated a house in Hogsback in the Eastern Cape and now we’re starting on our home in Kayser’s Beach, which is also in the Eastern Cape. But that’s another story...

QUICK PROJECT GUIDE

- Hard labour: 3/10
- Skill level: 4/10
- Time needed: ± 1 hour
- Finished size: ± 1 600 (L) x 470 (H) x 340mm (W)

Do it yourself for about R600: wood R270, wheelbarrow wheel R280, screws R50

Project notes

- Remember to drill pilot holes, where necessary.
- Check out scrapyards for a second-hand wheelbarrow wheel and a piece of steel piping. This will reduce your costs significantly.

![Seat diagram](view from underneath)

Cut screws are manufactured in such a way that they make their own pilot holes when turned; they are screwed in with a special square drive and not the usual Pozidriv.

Shopping list

- 22 x 144mm planed pine, cut to:
  - two 1 000mm lengths (seat)
- 38 x 38mm pine, cut to:
  - two 1 300mm lengths and four 260mm lengths (seat frame and leg struts)
- 38 x 76mm pine, cut to:
  - four 450mm lengths (legs)
  - two 1 200mm lengths (wheel struts)
- 1 wheelbarrow wheel
- twenty-two 8mm x 75mm cut screws
- sixteen 6mm x 50mm chipboard screws
- two 20mm pipe saddles
- 190mm length of 22mm steel piping (wheel axle)
- 120-grit sandpaper

Tools

- cordless drill or screwdriver
- 3mm pilot bit
- tape measure
- pencil
- wood glue
- sander

Get started...

1 Measure and mark 300mm from one end of the two 1 300mm framework pieces. Place two of the 260mm framework lengths between the 1 300mm pieces: one at the 300mm mark and one at the far end (see sketch); glue and screw together. >>
2 Glue and screw the legs into the four corners of the frame. I prefer drilling the pilot holes diagonally for this kind of join to make it extra sturdy.

3 Measure and mark 150mm from the bottom of each leg and screw the remaining two 260mm lengths at right angles across the legs on the inner sides.

4 Place the two planed pine planks for the seat next to each other and place the framework upside down on this. Drill pilot holes and screw the frame to the seat with the chipboard screws.

5 Screw the two 1.200mm wheel struts into the inside of the ‘back’ legs – use only one screw so that the struts can move up and down initially.

6 Place the wheel (with the pipe axle already in it) at the bottom of the front end. Make sure the axle is about 100mm from the front of the strut. Lift the wheel slightly off the ground by placing a 20mm spacer or thin plank under it.

7 Screw the wheel struts to the front legs (see sketch). Mark the position of the pipe saddles on both wheel struts.

8 Attach the wheel to the struts using the pipe saddles. 🔨

Sand the bench smooth and move it to a shady spot, ready for your next breather!

A quick study

Show off your DIY skills in a small home office space by turning an old filing cabinet into a nifty side table – then paint your desk with Tuis|Home Dirty Hands Chalky Décor Paint!

By Shelly Bergh • Photographs Francois Oberholster

This revamped cabinet could also be used as a bedside pedestal.

Desk lamp R179.99, rug R499.99, MRP Home; pot plant R399.99, stand R199.98, Typo
What you need

SHOPPING LIST
- filing cabinet
- four coffee table legs (available from Sullies Fabrics)
- yellow spray paint
- eight self-cutting screws (4mm x 20mm)

TOOLS
- jigsaw
- electric screwdriver

Get started...

1. Spray the filing cabinet with two coats of yellow spray paint on all sides, allowing the paint to dry between coats. You can remove the handles if you prefer, but we decided to spray the entire cabinet.

2. Use the jigsaw to cut four squares of 94 x 94mm from the pine plank.

3. Attach the squares to the top of the table legs with the 4mm x 20mm self-cutting screws.

4. Apply contact adhesive on the corners at the base of the filing cabinet and on top of the wooden squares. Let it get tacky before proceeding.

5. Slide the wooden blocks under the lip of the filing cabinet and secure in place with the 3mm x 16mm self-cutting screws. Tip: If your filing cabinet doesn’t have a lip like ours to help keep the legs in place, you can drill holes through the wooden squares and the base of the cabinet and use small nuts and bolts to attach them.

QUICK PROJECT GUIDE
- Hard labour: 1/10
- Skill level: 3/10
- Time needed: 1 hour

Do it yourself for
± R531: second-hand filing cabinet R250, coffee table legs R186, Rust Oleum spray paint R95

Transform an old table into a funky desk with a fresh lick of paint:
To create contrast, only the tabletop and frame of the tabletop were painted with two coats of our Dirty Hands Chalky Décor Paint in the colour Snow; with our paint, no sanding is necessary and it can be applied directly onto the surface.

When the paint was completely dry, we masked lines across the surface and painted it with Dirty Hands Chalky Décor Paint in the colour Duck Egg.

Once it has dried, remember to seal the paint with Woodoc Antique Wax. Apply it with a brush, an old T-shirt or a clean cloth.

See the order form on page 128 and get your pots of Tuis/Home Dirty Hands Chalky Décor Paint delivered to your doorstep!
Advice

Wood borer woes

Bev Arentsen of Durban writes

My husband owns a flat on the Berea in Durban and we’d like to tile it but there’s parquet flooring under the existing carpets. We’ve found wood borers in the skirting and are worried they may attack the parquet flooring if we clean and seal it.

Frikkie Greeff, managing director of Woodoc, replies

Tiling over parquet flooring is not recommended, especially if there are signs of a wood borer infestation. The best possible course of action is to get rid of the skirting and the parquet, throw a concrete floor and tile on that.

Alternatively, if the wood borer infestation is limited to the skirting only and you’re certain that the parquet blocks are unaffected, we suggest replacing the skirting, sanding the parquet floor and then sealing the blocks and skirting with a top quality floor sealer.

Appropriate products in the Woodoc range include: Woodoc 25 Polyurethane Floor Sealer available in Satin and Matt, or Woodoc Water-Borne Floor Sealer available in Gloss and Matt.

Quick fix for rotten wood

Ingrid Nye of Pinelands in Cape Town writes

We have several large cottage pane French doors around our house, all of which are rather neglected; the worst damage can be seen in the photo (above). We can’t afford to replace them but we’d like to fix them before we sand, prime and paint them white; any advice?

Deon de Goede of DIYDeon replies

It would be best to replace the wood but here’s a temporary solution: drill in a dowel to strengthen the corner of the door and remove all the rotten bits before using a wood filler such as Alcolin Wood Filler. If the holes are very big, use something stronger like ‘body putty’ which is used for panel-beating – it’s available at hardware stores. >>

Weekend inspiration

Make a handy easel for recipe books or display your kids’ photos and drawings on it.

It’s as easy as 1, 2, 3!

Saw a 22 x 44mm pine plank into the following lengths: two 210mm, two 350mm and one 335mm. Then construct:

1 Shelf Glue the two 210mm lengths at right angles to each other with Alcolin Cold Glue. Secure with 40mm panel pins and countersink the nails with a punch.

2 Legs Saw the top of the two 350mm planks diagonally at 10° and place them on either side of the 335mm length. Drill a 6mm hole in all three and attach the lengths with a 6mm bolt and wing nut.

3 Assemble Glue the shelf to the outer legs (not the middle one). Fill the nail holes with Alcolin Pine Woodfiller, allow to dry and sand to a smooth finish.

Stylish in cement
Carole MacDonald of Durban writes I’ve seen saris laid on cement flooring and then sealed, creating a beautiful carpet effect that also hides any cracks. Do you know which product I could use to fix the saris in place and which sealant I should use over this?

Joanne Sykes of Cemcrete replies
Unfortunately, we don’t have such a product but an epoxy-type sealer might do the trick. However, you could create a similar effect using our Modello Stencils (which can also be custom designed) whereby a pattern is stained onto the cement floor and then sealed in. Here’s how it works once your Cemcrete floor has been laid and cured – but not sealed:

1. Position your Cemcrete Modello Stencil (which has its own adhesive backing to keep it in place) carefully, making sure all the edges are stuck down properly.
2. Apply Cemcrete’s CreteStain (you can thicken it with CreteStain Gel, which helps to prevent the stain from bleeding under the stencil edges) in the desired colour(s); use as many layers as you want to create the desired effect.
3. Once completely dry, remove the stencil and seal with the appropriate sealer for your type of floor.

Working with epoxy paint
Paul Putter writes I’d like to paint my patio and garage with a coarse epoxy paint; how should I go about it?

Heinrich Ehlers of Sansbury Unparalleled Renovations replies
Epoxy is a tough, long-lasting coating that you paint onto concrete. It resists grease, oil and other substances that would ruin ordinary paint. It also cleans easily and can be found in a variety of colours. But not all concrete floors will accommodate a coating and preparing concrete can be labour-intensive.

First assess the condition of your concrete, then clean and etch it before applying an epoxy paint. Remember that success lies in the prep work. Plan to spend the first day removing oil spots, cleaning and degreasing the floor, etching it with a mild acid as well as scrubbing, vacuuming and rinsing.

On day two, fill any cracks and apply the first coat of epoxy followed by a second coat on day three. To do a good job (and save your back) we recommend that you rent a walk-behind power floor scrubber with a stiff brush attachment from Sales Hire (saleshire.co.za) for about R260 a day.

Brushes work better than scrubbing pads on concrete, but buy two pads if a brush isn’t available. Also, rent a wet vacuum from Sales Hire at about R150 per day if you don’t have one.

Before you even consider epoxy paint for your floor, test to determine if damp is rising through the concrete: if moisture is evident, your floor isn’t suitable. Also, forgo the project if a concrete sealer was previously used (you’ll know because water beads up when applied to the surface).

If you’re dealing with a new slab, you must wait at least 28 days, preferably two months, for the floor to cure and dry thoroughly before applying a garage floor coating. And if you’re dealing with a previously painted floor, the best advice is to remove the paint, especially when applying a solvent-based epoxy that could soften any leftover paint.

Then make sure the weather is set to play along. The temperature of the concrete must be a minimum of 12°C with an air temperature between 20–30°C for optimal curing/drying.

Quick questions

Q: Where can I find an enamel spoon like the one on page 111 of your February 2016 issue?
– Sharon Roux, Pretoria
A: You can get them at Melissa’s (021 886 6179, melissas.co.za); they’re available in two sizes: as a small sugar spoon (we’ve used it as a dessert spoon) and a large table spoon.

Q: Where can I buy the Wagworld pet hammock featured on page 88 of your December 2015 issue?
– Henriette Bezuidenhout, Potchefstroom
A: You can find Wagworld products at Vetsmart, Shop 74, at the MooiRivier Mall on Nelson Mandela Drive or you can buy online at takealot.com.

Q: Can I still get a copy of Home Yard?
– Lynne Porter Bronkhorst, Cape Town
A: You can order a print copy from our librarian (lucille.vanderBerg@media24.com); otherwise, buy a digital copy at mysubs.co.za. >>

Guest room revamp

Kenny Uzzell of Johannesburg writes

We want to revamp a small guest bedroom with an en-suite bathroom; we’d like to create a rustic look and my wife is keen on decorating in an African style.

I’m going to make a pallet headboard for the double bed and plan to use the Plascon range as featured on page 89 of your August 2015 issue – some of the slats will be sanded for an aged effect. I’ve also made a few picture frames which I distressed and my wife plans to have photos of an African sunrise or sunset printed for them.

We’d like to buy a matching duvet set and curtains as well as redo the adjoining bathroom. Any suggestions?

Jani Goussard of Paint & Décor replies

A headboard made from pallets is a great idea! It will fit in perfectly with the rustic look you want to create. However, I wouldn’t paint the headboard too much; rather keep lots of the natural wood exposed.

Then also consider botanical prints that suit your colour scheme for the picture frames and perhaps a quote you love to soften the rustic look and make it more contemporary.

For the bedding, I suggest either a grey stripe or keep it white and add a light grey curtain to soften the window. In terms of the general colour scheme, I’d focus on the greys and create pops of colour with accent pieces.

If you’re keen on the Plascon colour range, consider painting the focal wall behind the bed in Love Light Chiffon and the rest of the room in something light and fresh such as Lagoon Mirror or Misty Dawn.

Alternatively, I think it will also look beautiful if you paint the focal wall in Aegean Splendour (the dark grey from your selected palette).

In the bathroom, prepare the walls with Plascon Tile and Melamine Primer and then paint them in Aegean Splendour or Nomadic Dream – these colours will work well with the orange of the bathtub and basin and create a retro look. Good luck with your project!

A traditional seat

Cora Coetsee of Bloubergstrand writes This chair has been in our family for generations. How old is it and what is it worth?

Jo-Marie Rabe of Piér Rabe Antiques replies Folding chairs have been around since the earliest civilisations; they were found in the tombs of the Egyptian pharaohs and were also popular in ancient Greek and Roman times.

Interestingly, folding chairs fell into disuse as formal and official furniture after the Roman period. However, this type of construction was continually used in folk furniture. Cape folding stools, for example, were made by pioneers and migrant farmers in the 18th and 19th centuries and were used on wagons.

Thanks to the development of strong mechanical components during the industrial revolution, folding chairs were once again made on a large scale after the 19th century. Cora’s chair is an example of this 19th century revival. During the late 19th and early 20th century, thousands were made in factories around the world. The chairs available in SA were mainly imported from America.

Lawn fungus and chickens

Zenobia Wepener of Centurion writes I suspect that my lawn has a fungus, but I’d like confirmation before I buy a fungicide. The lawn feels like dead grass when you walk on it. We also have Silkie chickens which roam freely, so I don’t want to use anything that will be harmful to them.

JJ replies It does look like a fungus and if the Silkies are using this area, they’re spreading it. Spray something like Copper-Count or Phyta on the grass in the morning and keep the chickens away for two hours until the spray has dried properly; then you shouldn’t have any problems. If these organic products don’t work, you can use something like Odeon, Bravo or Mycoguard which all have low toxicity.

Bad medicine
Lulu Tsotso from Sandton writes Can I give my dog and cat some of my medication if necessary?

Dr Liesel van der Merwe, a member of the South African Veterinary Association, replies While some human drugs can be given to pets under the supervision of a vet, others can be very toxic! Always consult your vet before giving your pet any of your own medication.

Paracetamol (Panado) is extremely toxic for cats and causes their red blood cells to oxidise; this means they can no longer carry oxygen and are destroyed. This happens within 24 hours and can be fatal.

NEVER give any anti-inflammatory or pain medication not recommended by your vet to your cat – they are extremely sensitive to the side effects as their livers cannot metabolise the drugs efficiently.

Dogs are also susceptible to the side effects of anti-inflammatories but usually only show them if they have an overdose. The chewable tablets dispensed by the vet are palatable and we often see dogs who have eaten a whole month’s supply in one go! This is a serious overdose and can cause renal failure and gastro-intestinal ulceration; it must be treated immediately.

Dogs also often present symptoms having eaten antidepressants, contraceptive pills, muscle relaxants and antihistamines. Antihistamines generally cause drowsiness and a dry mouth, rapid heartbeat and dilated pupils. Antidepressants cause similar effects and depress the nervous system which may progress to a coma if large amounts are ingested. The contraceptive pill doesn’t cause any severe clinical problems. Muscle relaxants cause a variety of nervous symptoms such as disorientation, vocalisation and depression and will also depress the chest muscles, causing breathing problems.

REMEMBER If you suspect overdose and are in any doubt, it’s best to rush your pet to the vet.

Plan carefully before you start buying plants. Draw the area to scale – if the plan works on paper, it will also work in practise!

Goldine’s front garden boasts plants in her favourite colours: grey, white and blue!
When the Carstens family moved to Paarl in 1988, grey wasn’t as popular as it is today. But Goldine already had a passion for the colour. “We painted both the interior and exterior of our home grey,” she says. “Actually, I made everything grey: the walls, carpets, bathroom and kitchen. My husband and my daughters, Alison and Franza, said at the time that when they came home every afternoon they always wondered what else would have become grey! Together with grey, blue and white were my favourite colours for the interior décor of our home.”

Not long after, this colour scheme had spread to her garden – with different shades of blue everywhere. “In my garden, the palette also includes purple because there are so many plants with beautiful purple flowers that one can use,” she says.

Goldine, a landscaper, tackled the layout of her small space herself. Only the driveway and two big trees remain from the original garden. One of these trees is the tulip magnolia, which is always the first to bear its pale pink flowers in winter. “I believe that there should be plants in flower every season, something that’s achievable with good planning.”

She explains: “The yesterday-today-and-tomorrow, Cape May, forget-me-nots and purple wreath herald spring with their abundant flowers. Then it’s the turn of the low-growing white agapanthus, foxgloves, delphiniums, roses and star jasmine.

“In summer, the heliotrope, agapanthus, Shasta daisies and Salvia leucantha all bloom, while the Japanese anemone flowers in autumn.”

Goldine’s gardening tips

• Decide what you need and where you’ll plant it before you go to the nursery.
• Repeat similar plants and colours. Masses of white Agapanthus nana and a whole row of heliotropes have much more impact than just one or two of them.
• Use pots in shades of the same colour and fill them with plants with different textures and shapes such as lavender, rosemary, pig’s ear, aloes and Echeveria.
• Feeding at the right time is essential for healthy plants that flower abundantly.
• Keep topiaries neat by trimming them regularly.
Four into one

Making a small garden work for both its human inhabitants and their two busy pets requires some clever design tricks.

Neville says

Divide the space into those areas where you want to grow plants and those where you wish to have other elements. A good guideline is to divide it 50/50.
Sharing a small space with two dogs and having a beautiful garden isn’t always easy. But gardening expert Neville Ormond of Create a Landscape has designed Hein and Bonnie’s garden in such a way that all four of them can co-exist in harmony.

“The biggest challenge was to utilise the limited space so that there was enough room for everyone, and create a stunning garden. With this in mind, the lawn was removed because too many feet and too little sun simply didn’t work,” says Neville. The lawn was replaced with different-sized circular pavers and mondo grass was planted in-between as it can handle a lot of foot traffic. Next to the swimming pool, rectangular pavers were laid in an informal pattern with pebbles in-between. “It’s a durable surface that also provides texture.”

To complement the style of the house, a Moroccan theme was chosen. “When a house has a very specific style, it’s a mistake to use another style for the garden. In a small space it is especially important to create a sense of cohesion between the indoor and outdoor areas,” adds Neville.

Decide on a style for your garden and stick to it.
To create a Moroccan theme, Neville used steelwork with lots of detail in the form of fences, gates and lanterns, as well as around the lights. The same element is repeated with metal planters, interspersed with large concrete pots. All the concrete was painted in an earthy brown-grey colour (CreteStain in the colour Leather Tan from Cemcrete). A blue mosaic fountain with a typical Moorish design completes the picture.

“Anyone who is a fan of the Moroccan style knows it can look quite busy,” says Neville. “With this theme, less is definitely not more – which can be quite a challenge in a small space. To prevent it from becoming too busy, we used large containers filled with plants with smaller leaves such as blue freylinia (Freylinia tropica) and common boxwood (Buxus sempervirens) – plants with large leaves simply make a small space seem even smaller.”

Buxus sempervirens
3 The next level

If your roof can carry the weight, why not turn it into a pretty little garden?

These solar panels inspired the creation of this rooftop garden. If one has to climb up to inspect the panels regularly, it might as well be pretty up there, not so?
A wide variety of succulents from around South Africa are thriving in the Kriges’ roof garden.
The bright idea of creating a roof garden came to Johan and Ode Krige of Caledon Villa, a guesthouse in Stellenbosch, one day while sitting on their roof appreciating the beautiful view of the mountains.

“There are solar panels on our garden flat’s roof and I initially had to climb up a ladder every time I wanted to inspect the panels,” says Johan. “Later, I built a spiral staircase to make this job easier and that’s when Ode and I decided to take a table, chairs and a glass of wine up there. We realised that it would be a great place to enjoy the sunshine and create a succulent garden.”

Little by little, they hauled everything up the spiral staircase and so the garden took shape over a period of about four years.

They first put down a layer of drainage stones on the concrete roof and then laid pavers for walkways. The rockeries were created bit by bit with a variety of stones picked up in many different places.

“We initially dedicated each rockery to a particular region. There was one for the Great Karoo, the Little Karoo, the Tankwa Karoo and the Knersvlakte,” says Johan. “We bought plants from nurseries all over the country and even carted soil from some of these regions. Over time we allowed the plants from the different regions to overlap to extend the flowering season of each rockery.”

Plants on high

- A variety of aloes (there’s one in flower almost every month of the year)
- Vygies from different regions which flower beautifully in spring
- A quiver tree (Aloe dichotoma) and an elephant’s trunk (Pachypodium namaquanum) which grow slowly
- Bulbs such as the Karoo violet (Aptosimum indivisum) and century plant (Boophone disticha)
- About 600 sorrel (Oxalis spp.) in six colours that Johan’s grandchildren helped to collect
- A variety of crassulas
- Stone plants (Lithops spp.) from the Knersvlakte in the Karoo
- Carion flower (Stapelia spp.)
- Protea
- Pincushion
- Spekboom (Portulacaria afra)

Tip

Make sure there is a water connection on the roof and get a garden hose with a fine spray nozzle that can reach everywhere. The climate in the Western Cape is, of course, very different to that of the regions from which many of the succulents originate. However, most have adapted well to the roof. The Kriges water once a week if it hasn’t rained.
If you want to create a garden on your roof...

Make sure beforehand that the structure of the roof can carry the extra weight. Consult an engineer or architect before you start. Johan, a civil engineer, designed the structure of the flat at the back of their property in such a way that an upstairs area could be added in the future. This makes it strong enough to support the weight of a garden. The drainage on the roof must also be sufficient so that you don’t encounter problems with moisture on the inside of the house. Also keep your neighbours in mind and respect their privacy. No neighbour will be happy if you’re staring into their yard all day. >>

For many years we had no snails on the roof garden, but eventually they found their way up here! – Johan
Welcome!

First impressions count, which is why Gary and Karin Green gave their entrance garden a much-needed facelift.

The pathway was laid with round sandstone pavers 700mm in diameter. Dwarf mondo grass is planted in-between the pavers; this groundcover grows well in both sun and shade. The beds and pathway were edged with ornamental sandstone to match the pavers and create uniformity.

Neville says

Screening plants next to boundary walls are essential, but don’t plant them in straight lines everywhere; in some spots, plant them slightly away from the wall to create a sense of dimension and space.

Gary and Karin’s front garden was an eyesore. And because they firmly believe that you should be welcomed by a pleasant sight when you enter your front gate, they enlisted the help of Neville Orsmond of Create a Landscape six months ago to give their small front garden a makeover.

There were myriad problems: too many different plants in a small space planted too close together and the garden looked untidy. In addition, the lawn was struggling to grow due to too much shade and there were too many big plants such as yuccas and cordylines.

It was also time for a new style. “The railway sleeper path didn’t match the architecture of their house,” says Neville. “And because the garden sloped up to the front door, it was difficult to traverse.”

“Too little space is always a problem in a small garden,” says Neville. “The design elements used must be able to cope with lots of foot traffic.”

Cape thatching reed (Elegia tectorum syn. Chondropetalum tectorum) is grown in clay pots next to the fountain, while rubber-hedge euphorbia (Euphorbia tirucalli) in three metal pots forms a striking focal point near the front door.

Small gardens Q&A

Colour: more or less?

Neville If you use colour, rather plant an excess in one place than spread it all over the garden, otherwise the impact will be lost.

Wouter Green the boundaries of your yard. It makes your garden look and feel bigger. Tall shrubs in the background work well, but a climber against the walls takes up less space and has the same effect.

Petro White, green and grey remain a winning combination: soothing, timeless and striking.

How important are focal points?

Neville They are very important. In a small space you can usually see the entire garden from the house and a water feature will draw the eye.

Wouter Never place a focal point right against a garden wall – it will emphasise the boundary of your garden. By placing it slightly away, you create the impression that the space is infinite.

Petro I like a bench – it invites you to sit and enjoy the garden.

Are pots necessary?

Neville I let pots work hard in a small space. Group them together in a corner on the stoep or on pavers to soften them.

Wouter Beware of having too many pots. They can easily overwhelm the surface area.

Petro Keep the design of the pots simple and group them together in different heights and sizes.>
When Morné and Christine Faulhammer of Blouberg decide on a succulent plant for their stoep, it has to be hardy, waterwise and require little maintenance.

“Yes, it has to tick all the right boxes before we’ll plant it here,” says Morné, owner of Super Plants Garden Centre in Tokai, referring to their container garden with its breathtaking views of Table Mountain. “From the outset, we decided to only plant succulents in pots and planter boxes. We’re seldom at home, water is scarce and we’ve lived in Blouberg long enough to know how difficult it is to keep plants alive here.”

There was once a driveway where the stoep and container garden are now located. The Faulhammers filled it in, built a stoep and converted the old garage into a living room. The stoep was also built on a slight slope towards the street; this prevents pools of water accumulating, which succulents don’t like.

The planter boxes were built on the stoep with specific plants in mind. Mother-in-law’s tongue (Sansevieria trifasciata) is grown in front of the windows as they only reach a certain height – they don’t spoil the view from the house and don’t need pruning. Rush-leaved strelitzia (Strelitzia juncea) is grown in the planter boxes next to the steps. This plant does well at the coast and with its long, narrow leaves is able to cope with the strong wind.

“The only plant that shouldn’t be here is the Ficus bonsai. All the books said it wouldn’t survive the wind, but it’s thriving! Although it has taken on a windswept south-easterly stance,” laughs Morné.
A potted garden needs very little maintenance; you only have to weed occasionally. – Christine

Morné’s advice for a potted succulent garden

• Succulents don’t like lots of water or wet feet. So don’t water too much or place drip trays under the pots to catch the water.
• Use terracotta pots; they’re porous and the water evaporates through the wall of the pot. Glazed pots are better for plants that need more water.
• Most succulents prefer poor soil so it’s not necessary to add bonemeal or anything extra when you plant.
• Add the soil to the pot a layer at a time and compact each layer. Soil that isn’t compacted has too much air, which means the water will run straight through the pot.
• Fertilise your plants every second month throughout the year with an organic fertiliser high in nitrogen.
• Make sure you know where your succulents occur naturally. If they are endemic to a summer rainfall region and you plant them in the Western Cape with its wet winters, good drainage is essential.

Plants for a small garden

First observe how much sun and shade your garden gets before buying plants at the nursery. The climate in your specific area will also play a role in your selection.

TREES
• Purple ornamental plum (Prunus cerasifera ‘Nigra’)
• Leopard tree (Caesalpinia ferrea)
• Chinese maple (Acer buergerianum)
• Silver birch (Betula alba)
• Pompom tree (Dais cotinifolia)
• ‘Eureka’ lemon tree

SHRUBS AND FLOWERING PLANTS
• Yesterday-today-and-tomorrow (Brunfelsia pauciflora ‘Floribunda’)
• ‘Iceberg’ roses
• Gaura (Oenothera lindheimeri)
• Agapanthus nana
• Australian rosemary (Westringia fruticoso) for low-growing hedges
• Viburnum tinus ‘Compactum’ for background hedges

GROUNDCOVERS
• Dwarf mondo grass (Ophiopogon japonicus ‘Kyoto’)
• Dusty miller (Cerastium tomentosum)
• Creeping mazus (Mazus reptans)
• Silver carpet (Dymondia margareteae)
• Mexican fleabane (Erigeron karvinskianus)
• Australian violet (Viola hederacea)

CLIMBERS
• Star jasmine (Trachelospermum jasminoides)
• Chilean jasmine (Mandevilla laxa)
• Tickey creeper (Ficus pumila)
• Black-eyed Susan (Thunbergia alata)
• Potato vine (Solanum jasminoides)
• Boston ivy (Parthenocissus tricuspidata)

A sign of the season

When March lilies start to flower, you know the end of summer is nigh.

By Marié Esterhuysen • Photographs Kosie Jansen van Rensburg
The flowers of March lily (Amaryllis belladonna) put on a magnificent display in late summer, appearing before the leaves emerge. This indigenous plant is aptly named the March lily after the time of year in which it blooms.

Its fragrant, trumpet-shaped flowers in shades of pink appear in clusters of two to 12 on a bare, reddish-brown stem about 50cm high. Each of the flowers can be as long as 10cm.

After flowering, dark green leaves appear that die back when the bulbs go dormant the next summer. Don’t disturb the bulbs unnecessarily; leave them in the soil once the leaves have died back. It may take several years before transplanted bulbs bloom again.

March lilies are endemic to winter rainfall areas. They can be grown in other parts of the country, but the bulbs should be kept as dry as possible in summer. Plant these bulbs in a sunny spot in well-drained soil, especially in summer rainfall areas. Don’t plant them too deeply – the top of the bulb should be at soil level.

March lilies need little attention to flower well. Just keep an eye out for the black and yellow striped lily borer – its larvae feed on the leaves and penetrate the stem and later the bulb. The stem will snap and that will be the end of your flowers. Pick off the worms by hand and cut off any affected parts of the plant. You can also use Margaret Roberts biological caterpillar insecticide to eradicate the worms.

Remember: March lilies do well in pots as long as the soil is well-drained. The plant and the bulb are poisonous; avoid in households with children and pets.

Did you know?

The 18th century Swedish botanist Carl Linnaeus named this plant after a beautiful country girl by the name of Amaryllis, a character in one of Virgil’s poems. In Italian, “bella donna” means beautiful lady.

Tasks for March
By Kay Montgomery

1 Autumn colour
Sasanqua camellias begin flowering from early autumn. Their graceful evergreen growth habit makes them suitable for screening or as accent plants with their glossy, dark green foliage a pleasing foil for the satiny pink, red or white flowers. All camellias need regular water or flower buds may abort. Spread a thick mulch of compost or pine needles to help retain moisture in the soil.

Plectranthus species, hybrids ‘Mona Lavender’ and the Cape Angels series all provide a long-lasting show of flowers in white, pink, blue and purple in dappled shade.

Another worthwhile autumn-flowering shrub that can take more sun is the lilac or white-flowered ribbon bush (Hypoestes aristata).

As the season progresses, many plants, including agapanthus, echinacea, gloriosa daisies and sunflowers that flowered so generously in summer will fade, leaving behind seed heads to provide a food pantry for birds. Berries of Pyracantha and Cotoneaster cultivars also offer a feast for feathered friends.

2 Planting for spring
Buy spring-flowering bulbs now to ensure the best quality, but wait until next month when soil temperatures cool down before planting. As well as daffodils, narcissi, anemone, Dutch iris, snowflake (Leucojum), grape hyacinth (Muscaria) and ranunculi, we have a wonderful choice of indigenous bulbs such as chincherinchee (Ornithogalum), freesia, babiana, sparaxis, oxia and tritonia to add colour to your spring garden.

Efekto’s tip of the month
To help lawns revive in autumn after the extremely hot summer we’ve had, fertilise now and spray any weeds. After a few weeks, sow lawn seed where needed but be sure to aerate the lawn first – this way your new grass will be well established before the winter chill hits.
3 Vegetables for winter

Think ahead to winter, when you’ll be making soups and stews, and plant broad beans, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, cauliflower, carrot, onion, peas, Swiss chard, spinach, celery, leek and turnip now.

Planting vegetables while the soil is still warm gives them a good start before the cold of winter. Prepare soil by digging in generous amounts of compost and allow it to settle before planting. Plant in rows, blocks or raised beds. If different vegetables are planted in the same bed, they make the vegetable garden more interesting, and gaps from harvesting won’t be so noticeable.

Did you know?

World Water Day on 22 March focuses attention on the importance of water. With this commodity being so scarce in large parts of the country, every gardener should do their bit to conserve water by composting, mulching and grouping plants with similar water requirements. Only water gardens during the cooler times of the day, if water restrictions allow.

Now you can with new Roundup Gel

The pack fits in the palm of your hand and is so precise and controlled it won’t harm nearby plants or the soil. A touch kills the weed down to the root so it never grows back, making it perfect for treating weeds in difficult places such as flowerbeds, paths and even bindweed. New Roundup Gel.

A touch is all it takes.

Gardening tips for March

• March and April are the main planting months for sweet peas. They need a sunny spot and soil dug at least a spade deep and enriched with compost and Bounce Back fertiliser. Soak seed in water overnight to soften the hard exterior before sowing directly into the prepared soil. Keep soil moist until the seeds germinate. Climbing sweet peas will need a support.

• Towards the end of this month, or in early April, sow seed of blue kingfisher daisies, Namaqualand daisies, bokbaaivygies and other African daisies in sunny areas of the garden. Prepare the ground by thoroughly forking and raking the area. Water well the day before and after sowing seed.

• Soil is still warm and moist at this time of year, which helps new or transplanted shrubs to establish strong root systems and settle down before winter. By the time spring arrives, these will send up strong new growths that will stand up well to wind and heat.

• Cut back old flowers and withered foliage on alstroemeria, day lily, wild iris (Dietes) and Shasta daisy, and if they have spread beyond their allotted place or are overcrowded, divide and replant young outer growths in freshly composted soil.

• Dig up overcrowded agapanthus and remove as much soil as possible from the roots. If roots are tangled, use two forks back-to-back to separate the plants, or cut through cleanly with a sharp knife. Replant in compost-enriched soil in a sunny position, keeping agapanthus clumps fairly large to ensure flowering next season. ———
Pineapple sage is a delicious dessert herb with scented and flavoursome leaves.

How to grow Needs plenty of sun and moist, fertile soil that drains well. Water and fertilise regularly. It grows 1m high and 1m wide and can be used as a single specimen or for a hedge. It will also do well in a large container.

Tip of the month Keep it in shape by trimming in spring or after flowering.

Did you know? The flowers of pineapple sage attract birds and butterflies.

Common problem It needs regular watering, especially in containers as it wilts easily – but it will revive quickly.

Uses Adds flavour to fruit salad, fruit punches and drinks, and can be added to pot-pourri, herbal baths and tussie-mussies; also use in facial steams and as a rinse to condition and darken grey hair. It is thought to have antidepressant and anti-anxiety properties.

Try this pineapple sage cooler: bring 1¼ cups of water to the boil. Remove from the heat and steep 3 tablespoons of chopped pineapple sage leaves in the boiled water for about 10 minutes. Strain and add the sage liquid to 1½ cups of fresh orange juice, ¼ cup of fresh lime juice, 1 cup of pawpaw nectar and 1 cup of guava nectar. Chill in the fridge for several hours and add a 250ml bottle of sparking mineral water just before serving. Garnish with sprigs of pineapple sage.

Ludwig’s rose corner

Visit ludwigsroses.co.za and send queries to gardens@hometmag.co.za.

Rose guru Ludwig Taschner offers tips for autumn and advice on how to spray your roses effectively.

Q: Are some roses more drought-tolerant than others?

All roses will survive if they receive enough water down to root level, but bushy, spreading roses (such as Colourscape, Floribunda, and Fairytale varieties) with shorter stems that produce a canopy of leaves which shade their roots are more heat-tolerant. Also, large Panarosa shrub roses and climbers have stronger root systems that can spread wider and deeper in search of water.

I recently received an email from a gardener who bought a dozen ‘Naughty Nude’ Fairytale roses late in the season last year and planted them in a raised bed in his courtyard. He reported that they established themselves well in a short time, bearing beautiful blooms on

Q: How can I get rid of weeds in my rose garden?

In principle, it’s best to have a layer of mulch such as pine needles on the soil surface. When it comes to robust weeds such as uintjies or wild garlic, it helps to have a woven plastic cloth such as Weedstop over the soil with small openings at the base of the plants to allow water to penetrate. Avoid using weed killers.

Care for your roses

How to spray roses

Autumn roses can be the best of the season. Blooms are bigger and colours are intense, but spraying is of utmost importance because this is prime time for black spot and downy mildew. Spraying may seem like a chore but with the right equipment and the right products, spraying once a month is enough to keep leaves free of black spot. If done twice a month, the new leaves are protected as well.

1. Use an efficient spray pump with good pressure. The higher the pressure, the finer the droplets, which will distribute the spray more evenly and make it go further. For large gardens, a knapsack spray pump is best, while for smaller gardens a 5L or 7L spray pump is adequate. Don’t waste your time with a spray bottle.

   The best time to spray is early in the morning before 9am or after 5pm. This reduces the impact on pollinators such as butterflies and bees as well as beneficial insects such as ladybirds which are more active when it gets hot. Spraying when it’s cooler allows the pesticide to be absorbed more easily and quickly into the leaves.

2. Don’t spray when it’s windy, or if there’s the possibility of rain, because a lot of the spray will be wasted. Many spray formulations will not be as effective over 30°C.

   Mix just enough to finish in one day. Once a pesticide or fungicide has been diluted, its efficacy only lasts for a few hours. Generally, 1L of diluted spray is enough for five to 10 roses, depending on their size.

3. First pre-mix the concentrate with a little water and then add to the spray tank; fill with water to the desired level. Shake or agitate the tank well after mixing and do so regularly during spraying to keep the formulation well mixed.

   First spray underneath the leaves and into the dense parts of the plant because that is where most of the insect activity occurs. Then spray the top side of the leaves.

   Clean the empty applicator by rinsing with water and pour this water onto soil in a corner of the garden, so long as there is no run-off into storm water drains.

   Ludwig’s spray ‘cocktail’

   Mix Chronos (for black spot, powdery mildew, downy mildew or rust) with organic Ludwig’s Insect Spray (to control small-bodied insects and mild infestations of red spider), then add Spray Stay (an adjuvant that acts as a sticker and ‘sticks’ the spray onto the leaves) and spray your roses with this.

Tasks by region

Summer rainfall

Cooler days, dew in the mornings and the possibility of late rains increase the risk of black spot, so spraying is essential. Fertilise with Vigorosa and water well afterwards to encourage good blooms for the autumn months. Watering can be reduced to twice a week.

Cape coastal

March usually marks the start of the winter rains and an increase in fungal disease (black spot, downy mildew or rust), so spraying as a preventative measure (see sidebar) twice a month is necessary. If there is sufficient rain, fertilise with Vigorosa to encourage new blooms through to winter.

Lowveld and KwaZulu-Natal coast

Spray with Ludwig’s cocktail (see sidebar) to protect blooms from thrips which thrives in hot, humid weather. If the infestation is very severe, spray with Plant Care or Garden Ripcord. If plants have lost their leaves because of black spot, don’t cut back; just pinch off the new upper shoots. This encourages re-sprouting lower down the stem.

Chicken or beef?
The wonderful thing about stir-fries such as these is that you can just as easily use chicken, beef or pork fillet and mix and match your veggies according to availability and personal taste. Experiment and make the recipes your own.

Satay chicken
• oil
• 500g chicken, cut into strips
• 1 clove garlic, chopped
• 1 red chilli, chopped
• 500g vegetables such as carrots, mangetout, baby corn and broccoli florets
• 60ml fresh coriander, chopped

1 Preheat your wok. Mix 15ml oil through the chicken and fry at a high temperature until golden brown but still juicy. Spoon out, add a splash of oil to the wok and fry the garlic and chilli for a few seconds.
2 Add the vegetables and stir-fry until aromatic. The vegetables should still be crunchy, not soggy. Sprinkle the coriander over and season with lime juice; spoon out the vegetables and add to the chicken.
3 Add the remaining ingredients to the wok and stir until a sauce forms. Mix the sauce through the chicken and vegetable mixture or serve separately. Serve with steamed white rice or noodles.

Orange and ginger beef
• 500g frying steak, cut into thin strips
• 15ml soy sauce
• 60ml cornflour
• 30ml oil
• 30ml sesame seeds
• 1 knob ginger, grated
• 1 clove garlic, chopped
• 1 red chilli, chopped
• 45ml peanut butter
• 4 tomatoes, chopped
• 45ml soy sauce
• 15ml fish sauce
• 5ml brown sugar
• extra peanuts for garnish

1 Pat the beef dry with paper towel, drizzle the 15ml soy sauce over and sprinkle with the cornflour. Arrange the meat on a rack and refrigerate uncovered for 20 minutes – this ensures a crispier end result.
2 Preheat the wok. Pour oil in it and fry the meat over a high heat until crispy on the outside. Sprinkle sesame seeds over and set aside. Retain the oil in the wok.
3 Stir-fry the ginger, garlic and chilli briefly. Add the veggies and fry for 3 minutes. Add the 45ml soy sauce, rice vinegar, orange juice and zest, and sesame oil and cook for 2 minutes. Return the meat and mix through. Finish with a little lime juice and fresh herbs, and serve with rice or noodles.
Wok stir-fry 101

- Preheat the wok before adding any oil. Test the surface with a drop of water if you're unsure – it should evaporate immediately.
- Choose oil with a high smoking point such as canola, peanut or avocado oil.
- Season the oil: onions, garlic, ginger and chilli are a few examples of aromatic ingredients that add a bit of zing to a stir-fry.
- Make sure that all the ingredients you're frying are the same size to ensure even cooking.
- Don't overload the wok; the food will steam instead of frying; the same applies if you use a frying pan for your stir-fry.
- Always keep a careful eye on the wok and stir constantly with a spatula so that the food doesn't catch.
- Always serve with a dash of fresh lime- or lemon juice and a sprinkling of herbs such as coriander or basil.

Prawn and rice noodle salad

Prawns are expensive – stretch your rands by adding coconut-crusted chicken bites if you want the salad to go further.

Serves 4 • Preparation time: 35 minutes • Cooking time: 20 minutes

- 12 prawns, peeled but with the tip of their tails still attached
- 5ml lemon juice
- about 100ml cornflour
- 1 egg white, beaten
- 200ml desiccated coconut
- 150g vermicelli rice noodles
- oil
- 1 stalk lemon grass, bruised
- 1 red chilli, chopped
- 6 spring onions, chopped
- 5ml shrimp paste
- 60ml fish sauce
- 30ml soy sauce
- 15ml lemon or lime juice
- 30ml mint leaves
- 30ml fresh coriander

1. Halve the prawns lengthwise and mix with the lemon juice. Dip each one in the cornflour, then in the egg white and lastly in the coconut. Refrigerate for about 1 hour.

2. Pour boiling water over the noodles and let them stand for 3 minutes or until just soft (follow the instructions on the packet). Drain and rinse; set aside.

3. Heat the wok until hot. Pour the oil into it and add the bruised lemon grass stalk, chilli and half the spring onions; fry for a few seconds. Add the prawns and shrimp paste and fry until the coconut is toasted and the prawns are pink. Remove the wok from the heat, stir in the fish sauce, soy sauce, lemon- or lime juice and half the herbs. Remove the lemon grass stalk, then stir this through the hot rice noodles.

4. Sprinkle the rest of the herbs, spring onions, mangetout, radish and cucumber over, stir through and serve with extra lime juice and soy sauce to taste.

* Daikon is a Japanese radish that looks like a very fat white carrot. The flavour is milder than ordinary radish and it can be eaten raw. It’s delicious pickled and slow-cooked with meat or chicken.
Chicken pad Thai
These stir-fried noodles are all-in-one street food at its best.

Serves 4 • Preparation time: 25 minutes • Cooking time: 30 minutes

• 4 eggs, beaten
• oil
• 3 chicken breast fillets, cut into strips
• 2 red chillies, chopped (or to taste)
• 2 cloves garlic, chopped
• 1 knob fresh ginger, peeled and chopped
• 200g flat rice noodles, soaked according to the instructions on the packet
• 1 bunch spring onions, chopped
• 200ml bean sprouts, rinsed
• 30ml brown sugar
• 60ml tamarind paste
• 30ml fish sauce
• omelette strips, lemon wedges, cashew nuts/peanuts, extra chilli and/or basil to garnish

1 Heat a non-stick 25cm pan over high heat. Brush with a little oil, add a quarter of the beaten egg mixture and tip the pan until the bottom is coated, like you do for a pancake. Fry for about 30 seconds until golden brown underneath (you don’t have to turn it). Repeat until you have 4 omelettes. Roll up each one and cut into thin strips.
2 Preheat the wok and add a dash of oil. Fry the chicken until browned, but not cooked through. Reduce the heat slightly and stir in the chilli, garlic and ginger for 15 seconds. Add the noodles, spring onions, bean sprouts, sugar, tamarind paste and fish sauce. If the mixture seems too dry, stir in about 30ml hot water and stir-fry until it all comes together and the noodles are ready.

To serve Spoon into bowls and sprinkle with the omelette strips, lemon wedges, cashews or peanuts, extra chilli and fresh basil.

Leftover pad Thai?
Make rice paper rolls!

1 Get all your filling ingredients ready in bowls: thinly-sliced mango, carrots, cucumber, avocado, bean sprouts, fresh herbs and so on. Also use your leftover pad Thai. Wash enough butter lettuce leaves for the number of rolls you want. Placing the filling in the lettuce leaves first makes the rolling of the rice paper easier.
2 Quickly immerse the round rice paper sheets (available at any Asian supermarket) in boiling water, making sure both sides are wet. Remove and place on a plate lightly brushed with oil. Add a spoonful of stir-fried pad Thai to each lettuce leaf and then place the leaf with its filling in the centre of the rice paper. Add the rest of your filling ingredients next to the lettuce on the rice paper. Fold the rice paper like an envelope: first the bottom half over the filling, then fold the sides and roll up tightly. Arrange on a platter with the fold at the bottom and serve immediately with sweet-and-sour, plum or chilli dipping sauce, or with soy sauce. >>
Smoked trout fishcakes

Smoking food in your wok is surprisingly easy and exciting, but be warned: you’ll need a strong extractor fan in your kitchen – or do it outside over the gas cooker.

Makes 8 fishcakes
Preparation time: 10 minutes
Smoking time: 3 minutes

- 450g trout fillets, skinned and deboned
- 3 spring onions, chopped
- 10ml sweet soy sauce
- 5ml sesame oil

SMOKING MIX
- 60ml uncooked rice
- 60ml rooibos tea leaves
- 60ml sugar

1 Use a very sharp knife to cut the fish into long, thin strips and then chop finely. The fish must be in tiny pieces, otherwise it won’t stick together when you make the fishcakes. Mix with the spring onions and carefully shape eight fishcakes.

2 Fold a large piece of foil four times and place it at the bottom of your wok. Combine the rice, tea leaves and sugar (you can also add dry spices, chilli and dried citrus peel if you like) and spoon onto the foil.

3 Arrange the fishcakes on a wire rack or in a basket steamer and brush with the soy sauce and sesame oil. Place the rack on top of the foil in the wok; the smoke must be able to circulate. Cover with a tight-fitting lid.

4 Heat the wok on the highest heat your stove plate offers – it shouldn’t take long before the tea mixture starts to smoke. Then turn the heat down; we smoked our fishcakes for 3 minutes, which left the insides nice and pink. Decide if you want them cooked through or not. These trout fishcakes are delicious in a sushi salad.

Make a sushi salad

Spoon a serving of sushi rice onto four plates and top with your favourite sushi ingredients such as ripe avocado, julenned cucumber and carrots, pickled ginger and wasabi. Place the trout fishcakes on top with a dollop of Kewpie mayonnaise and a sprinkling of sesame seeds. Serve with soy sauce.
Fried cauliflower rice

These little cauliflower grains fried in bacon fat until crispy are a modern interpretation of traditional fried rice. This recipe can also be made with cooked leftover rice for a quick meal.

Serves 4
Preparation time: 10 minutes
Cooking time: 20 minutes

• 250g smoked bacon, chopped
• 2 garlic cloves, chopped
• 1 knob fresh ginger, peeled and chopped (or to taste)
• 400g cauliflower rice (see below)
• 250ml peas
• 2 handfuls baby spinach
• 3 spring onions, chopped
• 30ml soy sauce
• fresh coriander and lime juice to taste
• 100ml white bean sprouts, rinsed
• 250ml peanuts, roughly chopped

Fry the bacon until crispy. Add the garlic, ginger and chilli, and fry for a few seconds. Stir in the cauliflower rice and stir-fry until the grains begin to brown. Reduce the heat and add the peas and spinach. Stir through and then add the eggs, spring onions and soy sauce and stir-fry until the eggs are cooked. This will go quickly and remember: after the wok has been removed from the heat, the food will keep on cooking due to the residual heat. Season with fresh coriander and lime juice and serve immediately with a sprinkling of white bean sprouts and peanuts.

Sweet-and-sour pork nuggets

Add a twist to this takeaway favourite by marinating the meat beforehand.

Serves 6
Preparation time: 1 hour, plus marinating time
Cooking time: a few minutes per batch

• 600g pork fillet, cut into 1.5cm cubes
• cornflour
• oil for deep-frying

MARINADE
• 60ml light soy sauce
• 45ml dark soy sauce
• 30ml brown sugar
• 1 clove garlic
• 1 knob ginger, peeled and julienned
• 5ml sesame oil

BATTER
• 150g self-raising flour
• 50ml cornflour
• 5ml baking powder
• pinch of cayenne pepper
• 330ml Sprite, ice cold

1 Whisk all the marinade ingredients together and mix through the pork; marinate for at least an hour in the refrigerator. Remove and let the meat reach room temperature before cooking it.
2 Mix the dry ingredients for the batter and beat in the fizzy cold drink gradually until just mixed.
3 Drain the marinated pork and sprinkle with cornflour. Heat 750ml oil in your wok – test the temperature with a drop of batter (it must bubble immediately and not sink, but it also shouldn’t brown too quickly). Dip a few cubes into the batter at a time and fry until golden brown. Drain on paper towel and repeat until all the meat has been fried. Serve with a sweet-and-sour sauce and rice or noodles.

Aubergine laksa

This vegetarian curry is so versatile but if you don’t like aubergines (brinjals), experiment with vegetables such as mushrooms and cauliflower.

Serves 4
Preparation time: 25 minutes
Cooking time: 20 minutes

• 2 medium or 4 small aubergines, cut into chunks
• 200g pattypans, thinly sliced
• 1 tin coconut milk
• 200ml water
• 125ml peas
• 350g noodles, cooked according to the instructions on the packet
• fresh coriander, basil and cashew nuts for garnish
• lime juice
• soy sauce

AROMATIC SPICE PASTE
• 50g cashew nuts, chopped
• 1 small onion, chopped
• 2 cloves garlic, chopped
• 2 red chillies, chopped
• 1 stalk lemongrass, chopped
• 1 stalk lemon grass, chopped
• 350g noodles, cooked
• fresh coriander, basil and cashew nuts for garnish

1 Use a stick blender to pulse all the aromatics, except the oil, together. Gradually add the oil to make a paste.
2 Heat the wok and fry the paste until it just starts to colour. Remove and reserve any oil remaining in the wok. Fry the aubergines in the same pan until browned, adding a little extra oil if necessary. Stir in the pattypans, coconut milk, water and reserved paste, and simmer for 10 minutes; add the peas for the last 3 minutes of the cooking time.
3 Spoon the vegetables onto the noodles then garnish with coriander, basil and nuts and serve with fresh lime juice and soy sauce.

Don’t be alarmed! Shrimp paste, like fish sauce, smells awful but it adds a delicious flavour to food. It’s a key ingredient in South-east Asian cuisine and is made from salt and fermented shrimps. Store the jar in the fridge after it’s been opened.

Make your own cauliflower rice

Cut two heads of cauliflower into chunks, then pulse them quickly (stalks and all) in a food processor until they look like grains of rice. Be careful that the cauliflower doesn’t become pulpy!
Decorate to your heart's content with a variety of chocolate toppings.

Melt-in-the-mouth chocolate cupcakes

Makes 24 cupcakes • Preparation time: 45 minutes • Oven temperature: 180°C • Cooking time: 20–25 minutes

1 Make the cupcakes
Preheat the oven to 180°C. Line or grease two muffin pans. Whisk the boiling water and cocoa together until smooth and leave to cool. Beat in the milk and vanilla essence. Sift the flour, bicarb and salt in another mixing bowl. Also beat the butter and brown and white sugar together until light and fluffy. Add the eggs, one at a time, to the butter mixture, beating well after each addition. Add the flour and cocoa mixtures a little at a time, while beating well. Begin and end with the flour mixture and don’t be concerned if it looks like it will curdle. Spoon the batter into the prepared muffin tins and bake for about 15 minutes or until done. Allow to cool on a wire rack.

2 Prepare the ganache
Melt the chocolate and sour cream together on a low setting in the microwave or on the stove, also over low heat. Do not overheat and stir constantly until melted. Then remove immediately from the heat and cool to room temperature.

3 Prepare the icing
Beat the butter, cream and cocoa until creamy. Add the sifted icing sugar and beat at low speed until the icing is mixed in; then increase the mixer speed and beat until the mixture is light and fluffy.

4 Assemble
Cut a small hole in the top of each cupcake and fill it with a spoonful of ganache. Spread a little ganache on top of each cupcake to make it smooth and even. Then use a piping bag to finish off each one.

Salmon and sour cream pasta
Under R100 • Serves 4 • Preparation time: 20 minutes
Cooking time: 20 minutes

• 400g dried linguine or spaghetti
• 15ml olive oil
• 1 bunch spring onions, chopped
• 1 red chilli, chopped (optional)

1 Bring a large pot of salted water to the boil and cook the pasta according to the instructions on the package or until al dente. Drain and set aside.
2 Heat the oil in a frying pan and briefly sauté the spring onions, chilli and garlic until fragrant. Stir in the broccoli florets and stir-fry for another minute or two.
3 Carefully stir in the flaked salmon, sour cream, lemon juice and zest to taste and heat through. Stir into the hot pasta and season with salt and pepper.

Saucy lamb ribs
Under R150 • Serves 4 • Preparation time: 20 minutes
Baking time: 1 hour

• 800g (8–12) individual lamb riblets
• 15ml paprika
• 3ml each ground coriander and cumin
• 15ml oil
• 120ml white wine

1 Roll the ribs in the spices and fry in the oil until golden brown on all sides. Take care to do this properly – it will ensure a juicy result.
2 Stir in the white wine and vegetables and then cook for 3 minutes. Stir in the tomato and onion mix and beans, season with salt and pepper, and spoon into a baking dish. Cover with foil and bake for 1 hour in a preheated oven at 180°C. Serve with a fresh salad.

Tip If you’re pressed for time, substitute the ribs with small rib chops and bake for 20 minutes instead of 1 hour.
Quinoa and chorizo salad

Under R110 • Serves 4 • Preparation time: 25 minutes
Cooking time: 20 minutes

• 30ml olive oil
• 1 large chorizo sausage, sliced
• 1 onion, finely chopped
• 1 red pepper, seeded and diced
• 250g mushrooms, chopped
• 15ml mild curry powder
• 250ml quinoa, rinsed
• about 500ml chicken stock, boiling hot
• 2 large ripe tomatoes, cut into wedges
• a handful of fresh rocket and basil leaves

1 Heat the oil in a large saucepan and fry the chorizo until crispy. Remove from the pan and sauté the onion, pepper and mushrooms until glossy. Add the curry powder and quinoa, and mix. Add the stock and simmer with the lid on until cooked or according to the instructions on the quinoa package (usually about 15 minutes). Taste and season with salt and pepper.
2 Stir the chorizo and tomatoes into the quinoa and spoon onto a serving platter. Sprinkle the fresh leaves over.

Chicken salad

Under R125 • Serves 4 • Preparation time: 20 minutes
Cooking time: 10 minutes

• 15ml olive oil
• 650g bite-size crumbed chicken pops
• 150g mixed lettuce leaves
• 100g green olives, pitted
• 1 tin chickpeas, drained and rinsed
• fresh bread and lemon wedges, for serving

DRESSING
• 125ml yoghurt
• 125ml mayonnaise
• 5ml Dijon mustard
• 15ml lemon juice

1 Heat the oil and fry the chicken pops until crispy. Drain and allow to cool slightly.
2 Mix all the salad dressing ingredients and season to taste with salt and pepper. Mix the lettuce leaves, chickpeas and olives, and add the chicken. Drizzle generously with the dressing and serve with fresh bread and lemon wedges.

Make your own crumbed chicken pops
Cut 3–4 chicken breasts into bite-sized cubes. Coat with flour, dip in beaten egg and then roll in the crumbs of your choice. Refrigerate the chicken cubes for 20 minutes before frying in oil; this helps the crumbs to stick.
A mercenary approach to letting go of peripherals has brought us to a more frugal state of mind, one that has led us to more considered lifestyle choices, says our food columnist Karen Dudley of Woodstock’s The Kitchen.

We’d already packed away 50 boxes of our stuff to go into storage during our home renovations but we had no idea it would take so long for the plans to be approved, and quite honestly we’d been living happily without all their contents for months and months. Then the movers were at last at our front door, moving out beds and cupboards, appliances and still more big boxes to go to our temporary home in the Southern Suburbs.

After meetings with an architect and builders, designers and engineers, our plans were finally passed after 10 months. Full of hope, we’re about to start building in earnest. We are dreaming of the kids’ bedrooms, a dressing room for us (what luxury!), an eco pool and best of all… a dream kitchen for me!

I used to run my catering company from home. Mine was a hard-working kitchen! Prep people, cleaners and cooks used to come over to cater for small and large parties and events until my poor Sweetheart stood before one of the six fridges, quite disconsolate. Could he eat this? Could he use this milk? So we moved my business to our current shop, The Kitchen, down the road in Woodstock. What an excellent venture it has been! But my home kitchen languished. Once the scene of bustling activity, it now looks war-torn and has struggled with its identity. It’s time for a new one to become the centre of family activity.

Packing up has been an epic endeavour with so much to learn along the way. We need so little. We have squashed, quite sweetly, into our temporary home. Even my substantial kitchen has fitted into our “camping” kitchen, especially once I’d released some ancient noodles and kumquat preserves that had been sitting at the back of the shelves since 2006!

The process of letting go of stuff – recycling, charity shops, gifting and selling – has brought us to a more condensed, considered place, less cluttered and burdened by years of accumulation. It’s a tricky thing for an avid collector (not a hoarder!) to let go, but the examination of things and deciding what to keep and what to release has been a cathartic experience. A mercenary approach to letting go of peripherals and things that we are not using has brought us to a more frugal state of mind, one which is perhaps more in tune with the fragile reality of our precious natural resources and has led us to more considered lifestyle choices.

I have a few priorities for my new kitchen: besides beautiful surfaces and lots of wood to chop on, we want a bespoke island around which family and friends can gather. And the toaster and toppings have to be close at hand. I’m a compulsive composter so there needs to be provision for easy management of organic waste. Space for glass and plastic recycling is also imperative. I need just a few good pots and pans at home and smaller quantities of cupboard stock. We’ve been eating out of our garden more and more and realise that real luxury has to do with self-sufficiency.

Having a few beautiful things around us does make us feel at home in our rented space, so we’ve brought our comforts: candlesticks and teacups, the orchids in my care and my terrarium. I’ve also brought some linen and hung the odd picture on the few hooks available.

In our busy lives we have, in reality, precious few hours together as a family during the week. So I’m the master of the quickly-put-together supper: usually a grilled piece of meat or fish or something I’ve remembered to pop into the oven as soon as I get home – and, of course, something fresh and green.

Our dear friend Dimitri came to our shop for lunch and told me about this salad: it’s a simple slaw but the crisp ingredients and tangy dressing prove that less is indeed more. He’d hardly finished talking me through it when one of my cooks, Phumla, set about making it! It has become a firm favourite.

Dimitri’s slaw

- a generous handful of rocket leaves
- ¼ white cabbage, finely sliced
- 2 large carrots, peeled and coarsely grated
- 2 Granny Smith apples, half peeled and coarsely grated (sprinkle with lemon to prevent discolouring)
- 2 medium raw beetroots, peeled and finely grated
- 4 sprigs of mint leaves, picked and shredded

15ml toasted sesame seeds
- Maldon salt and black pepper to taste

Dressing
- juice of 1 orange
- 60ml creamed horseradish
- pinch of salt
- 60ml quality olive oil

1 First whisk the dressing ingredients together in a small bowl. Then layer the rocket leaves on a serving platter. Drizzle a little dressing over the shredded cabbage with an extra splash of olive oil and place on top of the rocket.
2 Toss the carrot and apple together with a little dressing and layer on top of the cabbage. Season with salt and black pepper.
3 Toss the beetroot with the dressing and add to the carrot and apple layer. Finish with any remaining dressing and then a flourish of shredded mint and toasted sesame seeds. Colourful and delicious!

It’s the small things that count
Why a little, red something can make all the difference in the world...

Much has been written about the effect of colour on our lives. Red for passion, yellow for creativity, green for calm, white for peace... Perhaps we should all learn more about this subject, because then maybe the rainbow can help our crazy rainbow nation to regain its sense of harmony?

I have learned from personal experience that something small and very red can make a world of difference to a tired person or a sad soul. The smaller and redder, the more effective.

As a student I would go on a hike just about every holiday. This was back when we didn’t have support-frame backpacks, waterproof sleeping bags or supersonic boots. They were sometimes gruelling journeys over many days and kilometres. Nobody carried your backpack and at night you didn’t sleep in a bed. If I think back now, I realise it wasn’t a five-star experience, it was a million-star experience: snug in your sleeping bag under the open heavens of our magnificent country, and a million stars glistening above.

Because you knew that every gram you carried in that backpack would soon start to feel like a kilogram, you made sure you packed only the bare essentials. Clean underwear and socks were non-negotiable. A change of clothes for the last day. Dried vegetables and a few tins of bully beef, nuts-and-raisins and two-minute noodles. The heaviest item in my backpack was a bottle of sweet sherry. A heavy burden to carry, but essential because it was medicine. And finally, my personal pièce de résistance, something that weighed absolutely nothing, but ensured a world of delight: a packet of red balloons. Time and again, I experienced the miracle of a red balloon. No matter how tired you are, or how sore your feet, give someone a red balloon with his dinner of bully beef and noodles, and life is more beautiful, happier, better. You laugh and life is wonderful. (Especially if you’ve partaken of a sip or two of sweet medicine.)

Last Saturday, my guests and I once again visited the delightful morning market at Sedgefield. We always go early and look for a nice big log under the trees where we can sit and eat breakfast. We buy coffee and blueberries, oysters and cheese and a fresh baguette. I cover the log with my bright red tablecloth and instantly, as if by magic, our rustic table is no longer a rough log, but the scene for a romantic, platteland picnic. All the people around us, sans a red tablecloth, complimented us on ours. We had extra fun, we enjoyed our food more, we laughed and relished every bit of our wonderful breakfast because, you see, we had a red tablecloth.

One of the most touching human stories that I know is that of the liberation of the German concentration camps by Allied forces in the spring of 1945. It was the British and Canadian forces that entered the horrific Bergen-Belsen concentration camp on April 15. Here, they discovered nearly 60 000 prisoners who had been without food or water for days because their captors had fled, simply leaving them to their fate. Despite the fact that the prisoners were freed and immediately given medical care, they were so malnourished and traumatised that the death toll remained alarmingly high for quite a while, especially among the women. Life no longer made any sense for these victims; everything around them had been destroyed.

Who was the person who realised that something small and red could make all the difference? Someone (and please note, it was a man) arranged for a consignment of lipstick – red lipstick – to be flown in from England and distributed to the women. This made the world of difference to the morale of these bewildered women. Thanks to a feeding programme, clean clothes and red lipstick, they were once again able to feel like ladies.

To the man who accomplished this I cannot give the Nobel Prize for wisdom, because he has probably passed on. But I would like to do what I would never do for even the queen: give him a deep and grateful curtsy.

And a resounding kiss with blood-red lips.
